It seems there are still some potential gaps, though. Wired's Cecilia D'Anastasio, as part of an article with the headline "How Roblox Became a Playground for Virtual Fascists," detailed a Roblox experience she visited earlier this year where she spoke with someone who roleplayed as the Confederacy.

What has made Roblox unique in its field has been the interplay between its enormous constellation of experiences and its personalised avatar system. When you enter any given Roblox world, the user does not assume control of a context-relevant character (think Sonic, Mario, or Lara Croft) but as your persistent, user-created avatar. A virtual You, effectively – whoever you've chosen to be. Add to that an attendant in-game economy which has sprung up to support this expression of identity, with all sorts of user-generated clothing, hairstyles, accessories and skins available to purchase in the platform's avatar shop. Roblox offers an opportunity, then, not just for play, but for digital-first designers and entrepreneurial retailers.

If these new spaces were indeed to emerge, it's worth considering the issue of control and mediation of information. The internet as we know it today wasn't developed by any one single entity, but built collaboratively around open standards and protocols, including, notably, net neutrality. Whether such principles would govern this would-be internet successor is a topic of debate. If any company were able to consolidate power over the Metaverse's formation and become its de facto gatekeeper, the control they could wield over the dissemination of information and in setting their own commercial and security practices would be enormous.

The prices for the items are all over the map and it is up to you to research similar designs to learn what they are going for in the catalog. It is a great way to make some extra Robux if this sounds like something you might be interested in doing.
